Koncepcja „demokracji zakorzenionej”
Wolganga Merkela w kontekście współczesnego populizmu i kryzysu demokracji*

Katarzyna GUCZALSKA

ABSTRACT

Wolfgang Merkel’s concept of rooted democracy in the context of contemporary populism and the crisis of democracy: The article presents the concept of “rooted democracy” by Wolfgang Merkel, which was presented in the context of the democratic crisis. The Germanpolitical scientist indicates what democracy is — specifying the proper functioning of the regulations of the democratic system (regimes). Speaking of the weakness or strength of democracy, we must have a well-described set of system principles that determine the degree of strength of democracy or its erosion. The above set of principles of the democratic system is thoroughly discussed in the article. In particular, the functional model of civil society is analysed. The text also explores how the crisis of democracy is understood and Merkel’s view of the impact of global capitalism on democratic institutions, which contributes to the transformation of democracy into an oligarchy. The topics discussed in the article also concern alternative, non-liberal forms of democracy and populism. The question is whether Merkel’s concept is useful in explaining populism and its political consequences.

KEYWORDS

liberal democracy; civil society; capitalism

---

* Publikacja została sfinansowana ze środków subwencji przyznanej Uniwersytetowi Ekonomicznemu w Krakowie, Nr badań statutowych: 086//WGAP–KF/01/2019/S/9086.

 Dr hab., prof. UEK, Katedra Filozofii, Uniwersytet Ekonomiczny w Krakowie. E-mail: k.guczalska@gmail.com.

DOI: 10.24917/20841043.10.1.4